The county-specific populations by age and sex are developed from the state's age and sex structure and individual county trends. County populations by age category may not sum to the reported total due to rounding.

Uniform Crime Reporting

The Summary Reporting System (SRS) has been a national method of collecting Uniform Crime Reporting statistics for the FBI since the 1930s. The National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS) was developed in the 1980s to illustrate the volume, diversity and complexity of crime more effectively than the original SRS method. Washington state became certified to begin submitting NIBRS data to the FBI in December 2006.

As of 2013, the Washington Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs started reporting data collected by NIBRS. Until 2019, when the SRS report was phased out, both the SRS and the NIBRS data were provided. The only counties reporting via SRS as of 2012 were King, Whatcom, Thurston, Spokane, Snohomish, and Pierce. NIBRS data cannot be compared to SRS data due to the disparate methods of reporting – including counting offenses and the hierarchy rule. As of 2017, the SRS no longer includes arrests for adults and juveniles in its data and 2018 is the final reporting year for the SRS.

Summary Reporting System

- Source: Washington Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs (WASPC) collects monthly reported crime statistics from participating law enforcement agencies. The agencies participate on a voluntary basis as part of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Uniform Crime Reporting program. County annual totals include the sum of all reported SRS crime index offenses known to participating agencies within the county and reported to WASPC. SRS index crimes are recorded in a hierarchical fashion. Only the most serious crime is counted whenever multiple offenses are committed in a single incident. Given this "hierarchy rule," and the fact that many crimes, especially less serious ones, go unreported, the crime index necessarily under-represents the true volume of crimes committed. Nevertheless, the index is a useful indicator of the volume and types of crimes reported to police.

Adult Arrests

The Summary Reporting System (SRS) has been a national method of collecting Uniform Crime Reporting statistics for the FBI since the 1930s. The National Incident-Based Reporting System (NIBRS) was developed in the 1980s to illustrate the volume, diversity and complexity of crime more effectively than the original SRS method. Washington state became certified to begin submitting NIBRS data to the FBI in December 2006. As of 2013, the Washington Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs started reporting data collected by NIBRS. Until 2019, when the SRS report was phased out, both the SRS and the NIBRS data were provided. The only counties reporting via SRS as of 2012 were King, Whatcom, Thurston, Spokane, Snohomish, and Pierce. NIBRS data cannot be compared to SRS data due to the disparate methods of reporting – including counting offenses and the hierarchy rule. As of 2017, the SRS no longer includes arrests for adults and juveniles in its data and 2018 is the final reporting year for the SRS.

Summary Reporting System

- Source: The Washington Association of Sheriffs and Police Chiefs collect monthly reported adult arrest statistics from law enforcement agencies participating as part of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Uniform Crime Reporting program. County totals include the sum of all Summary Reporting System arrests made by individual law enforcement agencies within the county. Adult arrests include the total number of persons, 18 and older, arrested, cited, or summoned to appear in a court of law. A separate report is made for each criminal arrest but not for each criminal charge. Arrests, like reported crimes, are recorded in a hierarchical fashion where only the most serious crime is counted. Therefore, while a person arrested more than once is counted each time, each arrest is counted only once regardless of the number of crimes that may have been committed.

Jail population statistics are recorded as the Average Daily Population (ADP) and include only those jail inmates held by the reporting agency and does not include offenders participating in non-custodial programs or held in another facility, but under the jurisdiction of the reporting agency. Participating agencies also report the current capacity of jail facilities. A county's average daily population in jail may include offenders being held or serving sentences for crimes committed in other counties. Due to a collection process change at WASPC, as of fiscal year 2011, pretrial and post-trial data will no longer be available.
